Many homeless people have low self confidence which can be a barrier to fully accessing support. They can also find it difficult to engage in training whether low level or more targeted and may be hindered by poor literacy. To properly assist in these cases one key worker needs a range of skills so that they can avoid referrals which can upset those who already find it hard to engage with strangers.

Considerable resources will be needed to train key workers in the wide range of skills they need to support vulnerable people.
